Enjoy your game, and congratulations!Devices for determining the position of a needle in a body are known in the prior art. Such prior art devices generally include two spaced apart electrodes, each having a tip designed to contact the skin of a patient, and means for measuring the magnitude of an electrical current through the patient's skin between the two spaced apart electrodes. In this way, the position of the needle tip can be calculated based on the magnitude of the measured current. U.S. Pat. No. 4,442,836 to Bostelman discloses a multi-needle device including first and second electrode arrays, each array having a plurality of electrodes, arranged to form an array. A reference electrode is located in each array. The arrays are mounted on a supporting base for movement relative to one another, such as by a pair of wheels, so that a selected needle in one array can be moved relative to the selected needle in the other array to measure a first current through the patient's skin and a second current through the patient's skin between the selected needles. U.S. Pat. No. 4,598,749 to Bostelman discloses a method of determining the spatial relationship of an electrode assembly relative to 82157476af
